Maps

Several maps have been studied as part of this work. The ordnance survey organisation produced maps to a very high standard and these have been useful aids to finding locations of Colchester's old inns and taverns. Without a doubt, the large scale (1:500 or 41.66 ft per inch) series, produced in 1876, is by far the most useful, with sections of it being reproduced on the following pages.

The town was surveyed in 1876 by Captain H G Pilleau (Royal Engineers) and levelled by Captain W Wynne (Royal Engineers) and shows Colchester as it was then, in fascinating detail (due to its large scale) and as it was before the advent of the motor car caused so many buildings to be demolished to make way for new roads, and before mains water, electric street lighting, telephones, etc. came into our daily lives. It was made after the building of the army barracks, which are shown in splendid detail. The main impact of new technology was the railway line of the GNER, shown cutting through the north section of the town and giving rise to pub names such as the Locomotive and the Railway Tavern.

Because of the large scale of this map series, each premises is clearly depicted, showing details of window positions, doors, outside urinals, water wells, stable yards, covered ways, and the like.

At the end of this section, are extracts from a set of Chas. Goad (Civil Engineer) insurance maps of the town centre area, dated from 1909 and which, whilst not as extensive as the 1876 series, does show many extra details. The scale is 1:480 or 40ft per inch. This set is particularly useful because it shows what each premises was used for, how many storeys it had, what it was constructed of, street numbers, etc. Yet again, it shows the destruction that has taken place in the town over the past century, mainly to accommodate the requirements of the motor vehicle.

Regrettably, this section must assume that the reader possesses a certain familiarity with Colchester, as the map extracts do not fit into a grid system and do not all point vertically to the north. The extracts have been selected to show as many premises as possible per page. For the unfamiliar, it is recommended that a street map be used to assist with explaining locations more fully.

Premises Identified on the 1876 and 1909 Maps

The houses shown or identified on this map series are listed below and refer to the numbering system of maps on the following pages. The order of numbering generally follows the various east to west and south to north straight line routes. The map series does not include outlying pubs in Lexden, Old Heath, Mile End and Greenstead and the 1909 series only includes a small number of houses compared to the 1876 series. All of the maps have an arrow that indicates north. The highlighted properties in the following list appear on both 1876 and 1909 maps.

(The 'current situation' comment was correct in 2012. The housing developments of Layer Road, Prettygate, Monkwick, Barnhall, etc. were not then to be built for many years to come).

Abbreviations Used - 1876 Map

Typical abbreviations and signs are as follows:

BM 93.7 Refers to a bench mark, usually cut into a wall or structure showing the height, in feet, above mean sea level. The highest pub appears to be the New Inn at 109 feet. Many of these bench marks survive to this day, although they are often confused with war department (WD) marks, which are similar.

C.R. Centre of the road? Usually used in conjunction with boundary marks between wards or parishes.

F.P., F.S., F.W. Unsure of what these refer to, but possibly foot path, fixed wall, etc.

Guide Post Presumably a signpost pointing the way into town or to outlying towns and villages.

L Light? This mark is shown at each end of the Red Lion passageway.

L.P. Lamp post?

M.P. Marshalling post? Found near to railway track.

P Pump. These seem to occur with great regularity in the confines of back yards or gardens.

Posts It is unknown what the relevance of these were and if they were simply for hanging out the washing, surely they were hardly worthy of recording.

Stone Presumably a stone giving information about distances or underground services or to determine boundaries of land. A few of these still exist in their original positions.

Stone WD As above but showing the war department signature.

Urinal Public houses tended to have their toilet facilities outside in the yard and sometimes in the street itself such as is the case with the Brewer's Arms, the Royal Standard, etc.

Tank Tank for storing water for washing and drinking. Running water was still, at that time, not available to the majority of the townsfolk and it was not to be so until the Jumbo water tower was built some eight years later. Up until then all water had to be pumped from resevoirs or wells.

W.P. Water pump or pipe?

W.T. Water tank? These seem to occur with great regularity in the confines of back yards or gardens.

Pillar Letter Box and Letter Box Evidence of the Royal Mail postal system that was started in 1840

Abbreviations Used - 1909 Map

Typical abbreviations and signs are as follows:

BK 1ST Brick first floor

D Dwelling

P.H. Public House

Street numbers are shown in the road area, directly adjacent to the building.

The numbers within the confines of the building shape signify the number of storeys.

2 signifies two storeys.

The Inns, Taverns and Pubs of Colchester

The round symbols signify positions of the all important fire hydrants, so important to those assessing insurance risk and therefore the size of the premium.

There are other, more subtle, abbreviations concerning windows, types of shutters, types of doors, etc. but these are not detailed in this listing.

The following pages show the plan views of land occupied by public houses and hotels. Where the detail is bracketed, it indicates that the building was previously or later used as a licensed house, or alternatively, was a beer house that was consequently unidentified by the map maker.

There must also be other buildings shown on the 1876 map extracts which were licensed, but which cannot, at this stage, be accurately identified.

Colchester Library kindly gave permission for the copying of sections of these maps.

EDDIE WILLETT

This picture is a copy of a painting done in the 1960s, allegedly by Mick Smee (artist) and portraying Edward Hersant (Eddie) Willett, landlord of the New Market Tavern in the 1960s.

Given to us by Mike Blackmore landlord of the New Town Tavern in 2012.
Mike had worked at that pub and took the word 'tavern' from here when renaming his pub.
